FRIEND OF LABOR.

The Labor World, a leading publication issued at Pittsburgh, makes some very strong points in favor of Senator Elkins of this State, regarding his favorable attitude and record toward labor and the workmen of this country, as follows:

"Labor has some able champions in the Congress of the United States but of the nearly five hundred men who compose the two branches of that body there will not be found a more consistent friend of the working men than Stephen Benton Elkins, United States Senator from West Virginia. In his long political career he has advocated every measure which he felt was promotive of the best interests of labor. He believes in labor. He sympathizes with it. He sincerely wants it to have its just deserts. He believes it worthy of its hire. And his course as a United States Senator has been a living out of his attitude toward labor."

"There are men who for political reasons are friendly toward labor, who would yet stab it in the back if it was not always looking. But not so with Senator Elkins. For many years he has been one of the large employers of labor in his section of the country. And in all that time he has treated his men so eminently just and fair that he has not had the slightest trouble with them. Some men may be friends of labor politically, simply for political purposes, but the man who is so on the square with his employees as to never have had the slightest trouble with them, he is the man that proves himself the real, genuine friend of the workingman. There is no pretense about that. It is the real thing. It is the highest test. And Senator Elkins has not been found wanting when that test has been applied. He needs no better vindication than that, for the man who as an employer of labor is so eminently fair with it as to never have had any trouble with it has the best sort of evidence of his real feeling toward it and it would not be expected that his course as a legislator would coincide with his record as an employer. And the minutest examination of his record as a Senator reveals that such is the case."

"From the time that Senator Elkins entered the Senate he has given his unsparing support to every just measure advocated by labor. It is doubtless true that he has not advocated every proposition advanced by labor representatives—for they are no more than human, and some times will ask for things that should not be in justice to others be granted—but whenever they have shown him that the enactment of a measure urged by them would be just and fair, he has ever stood ready to lend his powerful support. Senator Elkins feels that he is a Senator entrusted with the interests of all the people. He is not the sort of man to follow blindly a course laid down for him by any class of men. It is the man with the open eye and the ready ear, the man who will see and listen, and will then give his verdict in accordance there-

With that labor wants in high places and whom the country needs. And such a man is Senator Elkins. A part of his life was spent in Missouri, and he wants to be shown. He wants to be shown the wisdom and the justice of a proposition, and if you can show him that you thereby enlist the support of one of the most powerful men in Congress. It is that sort of a man that labor needs in Congress. The man who is branded by his associates as being but a tool of the trusts, who advocates whatever they desire whether it is good or bad, right or wrong, wise or foolish, that man soon loses his power in Congress, as well as his influence. It is the man who from sincere motives, the man who is convinced of the righteousness of his cause, urges a thing, that the Congress and the people trust. And that is the manner of man Senator Elkins is."

WHY RYMER GOT IT.

The Weston Independent makes some interesting revelations of the nomination of Floyd Rymer for the State senate in this district as follows, which explain some things that were mysterious away from home:

"A few fellows calling themselves a senatorial convention hid out somewhere one day last week—we are told it was in the day-time—and ran poor Rymer of insurance fame down cornered him, held him up and thrust upon him the Democratic nomination for state senator. Rymer wanted to be the legislative nominee in this county some weeks ago, and he had enough sentiment worked up to get it, and thereby lings a tale. Along came the party bosses, nipped his hopes, ambitions and what he regarded as a sure cinch, in the bud, and down he went beneath a conspiracy of self-seeking Democratic politicians. 'This ends Rymer,' they thought, but Rymer refused to 'die clear dead' at the imperious command, and he said words and thought thoughts that looked frightful to the gang. 'We will appease his wrath,' they thought, 'by making him a gratis gift of something which is a great deal more valuable than nothing,' and so they came bearing him the rich gift of his nomination in a district which no Democrat ever created in the image of Thomas Jefferson could hope to carry. Whether it was borne to him on a silver salver or a common chip has not been related. Rymer is a genuinely good fellow. If he thinks the Judases who once betrayed him have conferred any particular favor on him by giving him something that he didn't want; something that isn't worth anything at all; something that will demand of him the expenditure of money, time, energy, anxiety, toil and grievous woes untold—and, all for nothing, except to have his wrath appeased—and then cause him to 'cuss' and perchance to lose his standing in church, to say nothing of all of the loss in business—then we extend our sincerest congratulations; for, to use a famous expression of the great Lincoln, for anybody who would like some thing of the sort, this is about the worst of thing he would likely want."

CHEAPER BOOKS.

The Telegram believes every one is ready to concede that there ought to be such revision of the school laws of this State as will very materially reduce the cost of text books. Any one that knows anything about the necessary expenditures for school books at the opening of the terms of school will admit there is something to remedy materially.

It is a duty involving on the commission appointed by the governor to revise the school laws and submit the same to the legislature to look carefully into this subject and suggest an effective remedy, and with that done or in case it may not be done, the legislature itself should enact a remedial law on the subject. This State must have cheaper priced school books, and it may be that there ought to be free text books altogether.

As we remember neither senatorial convention here touched upon the subject, but doubtless would have done so, had any schools opened about that time to remind them of the unwelcome condition and great hardship that confront the patrons of the public schools at east once every year.

The press of the State should dwell upon this subject and emphasize it to the extent that there will be definite and wholesome action at the next session of the legislature. Let's have action favorable to the patrons of the schools.

The Democratic organs are pleading for a united party for Rymer. They evidently awoke to the situation as portrayed at the convention that nominated him, when but one from his own county, seven from Doddridge and fewer than half from the county the convention was held in attended. The Democratic party through its selected delegates showed its indifference to the cause of Mr. Rymer, by staying away from the convention almost altogether and no one has any idea that he will come any ways near election, even with the united Democracy behind him. Besides the district is overwhelmingly Republican and it matters not how united Democracy may be, Rymer will find there are several thousand too few Democrats in the district to do him any real good at the polls.

McGraw seeks to have all the Democratic committees of this State gather at Charleston Wednesday, Sept. 26, that he may convince the MacCorkles, Chiltons and some others that he is the boss of the party and that he has lost none of his grip. We wonder how many will show themselves lackies enough to heed his bidding. They are unafraid, until it comes to yielding themselves to the lashes of the bosses whip, and he knows he must lay it on hard this time to save his own bacon.

All the Democratic committees of Harrison county, who have made up their minds to heed Boss McGraw and go to Charleston to be lashed again, will please stand up.

We wondered why but one delegate from Lewis county attended

The Democratic senatorial convention here that nominated Rymer. Our understanding was that Lewis county was entitled to nearly a score of delegates, and we thought it strange that the other two counties had curtailed the rights of Lewis until even the tail itself was nearly cut off. But the Weston Independent lets the cat out of the bag. Rymer is taboed in Lewis by the machine of that county, which would not even let him be the nominee for the House of Delegates. The machine seems to have a grip on the rank and file else they would have been down here to show common courtesy to Rymer.
